Stock focus

British scientific instruments company Judges Scientific continues to post solid results. In the first half, sales grew 9% and pretax profits were up 27%. We acquired the stock in January 2017 following a significant correction as the margin fell temporarily in 2016 and dragged the valuation to very low levels. The group has recovered nicely in terms of sales and margins, and the share price has since tripled. The valuation and profitability have now normalised and the company is in a position to create value. This can be achieved by means of appropriate acquisitions in line with its economic model, which could drive further share-price gains. We have trimmed our position.

Having accustomed analysts to positive surprises, Devoteam's first-half numbers disappointed. Following a spectacular year in 2018, the IT services provider saw its resource utilisation rate fall in the first half due to excessive hiring (easily corrected), which lowered the margin. The correction was severe, but the company should continue to post near-double-digit growth and a margin that is among the best in the sector.
